

CARRIE MAK (SENIOR RESEARCH ASSISTANT)

My name is Carrie Mak and I am a Research Assistant in the CoHabit PsyLing Lab, where I assist in running experiments and collecting data for research on bilingualism. I have a major in Linguistics with Option in Translation. I graduated in Fall 2024. I will be pursuing a post-baccalaureate program to fulfill the prerequisites for graduate school, where I aim to become a Bilingual Speech-Language Pathologist.

I am thrilled to be a part of the CoHabit PsyLing Lab because I see strong connections between psycholinguistics and speech-language pathology. The work we do in the lab deepens my understanding and provides valuable insights on how language and bilingualism function in the brain. As a bilingual individual myself, I am passionate about exploring these topics and eager to apply our research to improve outcomes for bilingual individuals in my future career as a Speech Language Pathologist.
